(April 16, 2010): Modern Service and Anderson Service for Home & Business were recently awarded "Contractor of the Year, in Technical Excellence", by the National Comfort Institute, Inc. (www.nationalcomfortinstitute.com)

The NCI contractor of the year awards are based on company size and sales volume and are awarded to contractors who are leaders in system testing and measured performance and have displayed outstanding dedication to quality and customer service.

"We are proud to accept the title Contractor of the Year," says Jim Glennon, President of both Modern and Anderson Service for Home & Business. "This is just another reflection of the quality service we provide our customers on a daily basis."

National Comfort Institute trains, tests, and certifies Contractors in "Performance-Based Contracting". This means that an NCI Certified Contractor has studied, taken classes and passed proficiency testing that helps ensure their understanding of a truly unique way of examining your home's heating and cooling system. This method of AC system testing can pinpoint system deficiencies and improve the efficiency by up to 70% and documents that each system is operating at its peak performance.
